About The Program

In today's dynamic business landscape, professionals shoulder greater responsibility than ever before, particularly in navigating complex projects crucial to their organizations. Program and project leaders are constantly challenged with addressing strategic, tactical, and technical issues, often engaging in firefighting scenarios. The Advanced Project Management & Strategic Leadership program is designed to equip students with the essential skills in project management and business leadership.

This comprehensive program not only delves into all project management knowledge areas outlined in the latest edition of the PMI® A Guide to the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK® Guide) by the Project Management Institute, Inc., but also incorporates the fundamentals of Agile Project Management, essential for contemporary industries. Throughout the second module, participants will move beyond the mechanical aspects of projects to explore the intricacies of managing relationships. The third module expands the scope to include stakeholder, client, and executive relationship management, organizational culture and diversity, and effective leadership within project teams. The fourth module focuses on leveraging data-driven analytics to enhance project performance amid uncertainty. Moreover, the program integrates Action-Oriented Projects, providing participants with opportunities to apply their newfound knowledge directly in their workplaces. Additionally, each individual will benefit from three hours of professional mentoring, further enhancing their learning experience.

Program Outline

Application and Importance of Project Management

Project Management is an indispensable discipline within every organization, pertinent to all stakeholders. Recognizing the diversity of needs and practices, this module underscores the significance of the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK), elucidating its alignment with broader organizational strategies, operational management, and portfolio and program management. Participants will grasp the intricacies, necessity, and terminology associated with project management.

Linking Business Needs to Project Outcomes

This module introduces a structured approach to project initiation, emphasizing the crucial connection between business needs and project outcomes. It entails analyzing project stakeholders and their interests, applying project selection methodologies, crafting the project charter, and formulating the initial project communications plan. These activities collectively constitute the first process of Project Integration Management: Developing the Project Charter,

Identifying Requirements, Scope, and Quality for Projects

Participants will learn to identify requirements, define project scope, and establish quality standards using various processes, tools, and techniques. This involves Planning Scope Management, Collecting Requirements, Defining Scope, creating the Work Breakdown Structure (WBS), and Planning Quality Management.

Managing Project Uncertainty: Risk & Procurement Management

This section focuses on identifying and analyzing risks, developing risk response plans employing qualitative and quantitative approaches. Additionally, it delves into procurement management planning, entailing the acquisition of goods and services from external entities and integrating their efforts into the project endeavor.

Understanding the Request for Proposal and Contract Process

A crucial aspect of maximizing ROI involves comprehending the Request for Proposal (RFP) process. Participants will grasp the significance of RFPs in facilitating informed decision-making for substantial purchases. They will gain insights into the process and steps of understanding the RFP process, ensuring the involvement of key stakeholders in selection and response scoring.

Leadership and Strategy

In this module you will identify, develop and work in a kaizen and collaborative environment. Participants will explore leadership theories relevant to team formation and management, learning to set goals, measure success, inspire team members, and sustain effective teams.

Managing the Project Team

Participants will confront the challenges of leading project teams, delving into personal and interpersonal skills, team motivation theory, and strategies for creating highly motivated, self-managing project teams.

Monitoring and Controlling Project Requirements

This segment covers monitoring and controlling processes across all knowledge areas, employing techniques such as Earned Value Techniques and balanced scorecards to assess project success and plan control measures.

Project Closure and Introduction to Agile and Hybrid Methodologies

The module encompasses project closure processes and activities, including pre-commissioning, commissioning, handover to clients, financial, contract, and administrative closure. Additionally, it introduces Agile concepts, utilizing Scrum and Kanban frameworks as examples.

Agile - Scrum and Other Methodologies

Participants will gain insights into Agile methodologies, exploring the Agile mindset, tools, techniques, and their applicability in real-world scenarios through hands-on experiences.

Change Management

Change Management is explored as a response to strategic agility in the business environment. The module covers assessing an organization's readiness for change, common change models, the change life cycle framework, and executing change in an Organizational Project Management (OPM) environment.

Building Relationships through Critical Thinking, Negotiation, and Communication

This module emphasizes decision-making, negotiation, and communication skills essential for building relationships with stakeholders, navigating complex relationships, and achieving consensus and trust in a project environment.

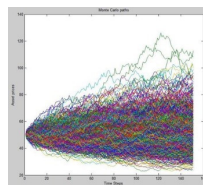

Action-Oriented Project (AOP) & Mentoring

Participants engage in one-on-one mentoring for Action-Oriented Projects (AOP), fostering active participation and learning.
